Vhalor XXVI - A Horus Heresy Campaign

Prologue Narrative:

Vhalor XXVI is a single-hive planet, its entire population concentrated within the colossal spire-complex of Hive Karthax. A vital logistical hub along a minor but strategically indispensable warp corridor, Karthax serves as a transshipment point for munitions, void-fuel, and macro-reactor components destined for dozens of Imperial warzones. The world's position providing moderate safety from warp anomalies was of minor importance during the Great Crusade. Once the Heresy began, and the warp sang across the stars to the lament of Imperial fleets, it became a point of pivotal priority for the Imperium to safeguard assets through relative safety by the minds eye of the worlds Astropath's. These eyes to the beacons of Terra stood stoic in relative security to commit to their sacred duties… until their sun was darkened by the shadow of a spear.

During the opening gambits of the wider war, the traitor grand cruiser 'Iron Reckoning' of the IVth legion Iron Warriors, translated unexpectedly from the warp and, crippled by catastrophic drive failure, ploughed directly into Hive Karthax's upper spires. The impact sheared away entire districts and left the cruiser's vast hull embedded deep within the hive's mid-levels, its reactor decks and command cores partially intact. Untold thousands died in an prolonged instant as the ship tore a scare through the Hive City, and came to a halt in the very heart of the metropolis

Both Loyalist and Traitor forces now race to secure the fallen vessel. To the Loyalists, it represents a chance to recover stolen Mechanicum data and high value acquisition of strategic intelligence. To the Traitors, the cruiser contains encrypted fleet-routing archives, Legion deployment logs, and experimental supply doctrines—intel that could cripple Imperial response efforts across the sector if properly extracted or, conversely, doom the rebellion if reclaimed.

The world bar its shining jewel, now belching black smoke and ash, is a barren void of dust and earth. To capture the ship, the city must first be taken, and for the city to be taken, the God Machines must march alongside their allies of the Astartes and Auxilia. Secure the outer walls and entrances, and slow the enemy.

Chapter I – The Noose Tightens

An Adeptus Titanicus & Legions Imperialis Narrative Event

The initial hours of the conflict see Loyalist and Traitor forces rushing to encircle Hive Karthax. The impact of the 'Iron Reckoning' has shattered outer districts and ruptured defence bastions, creating multiple unstable ingress and egress points around the hive's vast perimeter walls.

God-engines of rival Legios stride across the ash plains and manufactorum belts surrounding the hive, their mission clear: dominate the access gates, void-shield pylons, and maglev transit arteries that control movement into the city's heart. Whoever commands these choke points dictates which armies can enter the hive—and which will be cut off and annihilated.

Simultaneously, cohorts of auxilia and formations of Astartes clash across the outer fortifications and refugee-choked outskirts. Bastion lines, hab-block redoubts, and defence power supply silos become fiercely contested objectives as both sides attempt to establish forward command posts..